Attached is the response prepared by Mr. Warner to the question Cornish posed to you. Cornish called me after his call to you and he wanted to make clear that his purpose in asking the question is a lead in for you to take the position that you recognize that your strong personal assurances that the Agency will not conduct domestic surveillances against dissident political groups in the United States is not enough. Whereas, this provision will become law and should serve as a legal deterrent to assure that no elements of the Agency will ever engage in such activities.

Within the CIA's counterintelligence office, there was established a unit to look into the possibility of foreign links to American dissident elements. Various reports were drawn up as a result of the work of this unit on the foreign aspects of the anti-war, youth and similar movements and the possible links to their American counterparts. Specific information was also disseminated to responsible U. S. agencies, including the FBI. In the course of this work, we maintain no record describing how any individual exercises rights guaranteed by the First Amendment.
